Ecological Planning for Farmlands Preservation

Frederick Steiner. 1981. 122 pp. Oversize (11 x 8 3/8"), three-color illustrations. (APA Planners Press.) $15.95 (paperback); APA members and PAS subscribers $12.95.

This guidebook presents a step-by-step methodology that communities can use to decide what agricultural land to preserve—especially if there are competing land-use pressures.

It shows how to analyze and interrelate geology, physiography, hydrology, soils, climate, vegetation, wildlife, and existing land uses. It also describes how one county got residents behind its program by working with community organizations and advisory committees, by preparing a television documentary and an audiovisual presentation, and by promoting the preservation program in the local media.

The book has excellent summaries of farmland preservation techniques used at the federal, state, and local levels; describes five local preservation programs; and includes a glossary and a bibliography.
